I would like to recommend that the agreement between Microsoft, the DoJ and nine states be accepted.

It is so foolish, especially at this time of a national economic slump to continue to disable Microsoft.

Sure, lots of unemployed Microsoft technicians might be called back in to resolve the mess if this agreement is rejected, but this is a poor way to resolve the unemployment crisis in the tech world.

It appears that the ones wanting to reject it, have crossed the line, from trying to make it fare to all tech companies to get a piece of the action, and have moved into the realm of 'lets get microsoft', lets try to make them die.

I'm a home user who just wants all my stuff to work correctly and microsoft does a better job of doing that, as well as constantly creating more solutions to running businesses. In disabling Microsoft, you are disabling users like myself.

Mac computers seem to dominate the market in elementary schools, why don't we site them for unfair practices?

Thanks for listening.
